for twelve months, and a third charge was indefinitely continued.

Wolff was arrested during fair week by Detective Cannaday, of the Richmond, Fredericksburg and Potomac Railroad, when he acted in a suspicious manner at Elba Station. He was afterward identified by Lee Harris, E. J. Nervine and John Pitts, visitors, as the man who had jostled them as they boarded a train. A few minutes later each discovered that his pocketbook had been stolen. Harris lost $19, Nervine $20 and Pitts $12. Wolff will be tried in the Hustings Court for robbing Harris. In the Pitts case he was put under bond, and the charge preferred by Nervine was continued.

Throughout the trial the prisoner's sister, who came here from Baltimore, where she lives with her aged mother, sat near him. She sobbed most of the time, and when sentence was finally passed broke down completely. She did not disclose her identity. "Wolff" is said to be an alles.

Attorney Gilbert K Pollock, defending Wolff, tried to secure a postponement of the case in order to produce a witness, who, he said, would testify that his client was at the Fair Grounds at the hour the robberies occurred. "I have heard sufficient evidence to hold the prisoner, for the grand jury," replied Acting Justice Griggs.
